Seconds 1-5

Visual: A basic drawing of a person and a clock. The clock center has a mass energy ball, illustrating that the clock arm must be moving quickly. There are lines around the clock to illustrate the movement. It is to show how much time is moving and to make it appear urgent. There is a stick figure in front of it with lines maybe 1 inch long. His arms and knees are bent, with his cylindrical hands on his head. His eyes are wide, his eyebrows slope downwards, and the mouth is agape with his teeth showing. Along with the title underneath, 'TiME is RUNNING OUT!' for the entire ten seconds.

Auditory: The male narrator asks, "Do you ever look at the clock and feel a sense of quiet panic?"

There is a soft sound coming from the piano as the narrator talks.

Seconds 5-10

Visual: The clock is being raised by the same person. The hour hand is between 1 and 2, and the minute hand is on the 12. The person is still there, but further back, with their arms and knees bent. Holding the clock above their head. There are lines to illustrate energy surrounding the person and shadow. The person is a stick figure in front of it with lines maybe 1 inch long. His arms and knees are bent, with his cylindrical hands on his head. His eyes are wide, his eyebrows slope downwards, and the mouth is agape with his teeth showing. On the bottom right of the person, near the person, is a graduation cap floating, slightly crooked, pointing briefly upwards. On the other side of the person is a suitcase floating in the air at the same distance from the person, but its position is reflective of the position of the suitcase. Above the graduation cap, right underneath the clock, is a book, and on the opposite side of the human, above the suitcase, is a paintbrush.

Auditory: The narrator says, "That gnawing feeling that there just isn't enough time in one lifetime..."

There is a soft sound coming from the piano as the narrator talks.

Report:

Have you used this technology before?

I have seen the transcription function, or text, before, but I have usually only used closed captions.

What were your greatest challenges?

I wanted to be able for the person to visualize and understand what was going on. I wanted to elicit the feeling, without providing my own response to the video, in other words, having my perception impact it to be more subjective to me. Then when it came to showing inflection, knowing how to accurately describe the background music or the pace of the video would have taken even greater effort. It would also take the listener much longer to get all of the information that one normally conducts themselves while looking. Yet it still has its weaknesses.

What excited you the most?

I enjoyed the focus on details, being able to notice the small details, and being focused and highly intentional.
